Group Reflection

Our group planned the meeting by first discussing our idea through our group chat. We agreed to create a Raffy Tulfo-style roleplay about a teacher complaining that a student used ChatGPT for their thesis. As the group leader, I sent an invitation email with the meeting details and the Google Meet link so everyone would know the time and purpose of the meeting. During the meeting, we discussed the flow of the roleplay, assigned roles, and practiced some parts so we could understand how the conversation would go.

One of the main challenges we encountered was that one of our group members were unable to attend due to unforeseen circumstances. Because of this, we had to adjust our plan and redistribute the roles among the remaining members. It was also a bit challenging to coordinate everyone's schedules and maintain a smooth discussion online.

Despite these challenges, we learned that online collaboration requires clear communication, flexibility, and teamwork. Even though we were not physically together, we were still able to share ideas, make decisions, and work toward completing our roleplay effectively.
