

Prompt by myself using chatgpt:

make me a single story where its about a struggling but not poor young couple on how they live there lives in a third world country. make it emotional and make sure it has a good storyline.

Outcome:

<https://docs.google.com/document/d/1nAoE9rtaYp55YQyfxJsQOfDAcz2VDzZ3ID-TDbVthrw/edit?usp=sharing>

Improved Prompt by chatgpt:

Write a character-driven short story about a young couple who are not poor but constantly struggling to stay afloat in a third-world country. Focus heavily on their personalities, dreams, and fears. Show how financial stress slowly impacts their relationship over time. Include emotional dialogue, internal thoughts, and moments of vulnerability. The story should have a strong narrative arc: introduction, rising tension, emotional breaking point, and resolution. Make the reader feel their love, frustration, and resilience.

Outcome:

<https://docs.google.com/document/d/16vVLsCf1f7wnd6z9JrBb0YKS6PMXqrnXSKeCS-jLLol/edit?usp=sharing>

Reflection:

First, the prompts. I made mine broad because I didn't really have anything specific in mind. Honestly, I just got the idea from a movie I watched that had a similar kind of problem, and I wanted to see a different perspective of it. I asked ChatGPT to improve my prompt—maybe make it more specific and give clearer direction than what I originally had—and it did. The revised prompt became more focused, and I noticed that it emphasized bringing out more emotion in the story. That made a big difference because it guided the storytelling better compared to my initial version.

I read both stories, and the first one was good. It was simple, but still effective. Since my original prompt was quite broad and generic, I didn't expect it to be very emotional, and that turned out to be true. However, it still managed to capture enough emotion and interest to keep me engaged while reading. The characters were also quite typical—a lower middle-class couple dealing with everyday struggles—but they were still relatable in a way. Even if the story wasn't very deep, it still delivered a clear message and had a natural flow.

Comparing the two outputs made me realize how important a well-structured and specific prompt is. The improved version resulted in a more emotionally engaging and detailed story, while the original one felt more general and surface-level. This showed me that the quality of the output really depends on how clear and detailed the input is. Overall, this activity helped me understand how giving better instructions can lead to better and more meaningful results, especially when it comes to creative writing. that much emotion from it as expected since the prompt i made was broad and generic. But it was still a good story. I liked how it captured enough of emotion and interest while i read it. The characters were generic, a lower middle class couple who...